Corps Security takes fast response remote monitoring to a new level with Xtralis

4th January 2011 Corps Security has announced that it has incorporated the latest ADPRO by Xtralis video and audio transmitter/recorder technology into its state-of-the-art Corps Monitoring Centre (CMC). This announcement further enhances the longstanding relationship between the two organisations and allows Corps Security to provide a service that detects, assesses and responds to threats quickly, with minimal false alarms.

The ADPRO FastTrace 2 video and audio transmission, recording and analysis system has optional analytics for both IP and analogue video remote monitoring applications. This is perfectly suited to the Glasgow based CMC, which provides third party alarm receiving and CCTV monitoring services to a wide range of customers across many market sectors. Having been recently developed at a cost of £1.5m it is widely acknowledged as the leading facility of its kind in the UK.

Colin Rogers, global solutions marketing manager at Xtralis, explained, 'ADPRO FastTrace is the most widely used transmission and recording technology on the market and its speed and efficiency provides fast video verification of alarms. The new award winning FastTrace 2 product line takes this proven solution to a new level and provides the earliest possible warning of a security threat. This, in turn, minimises the impact to a business and enables the efficient and effective deployment of manned security personnel.'

In an alarm situation, the FastTrace 2 system transmits the video images and audio in real time to the CMC using the latest broadband technologies including 3G connections. This offers substantially lower cost when compared to the thousands of ISDN connections still in use today. Operatives at the CMC are then able to verbally warn an intruder using the FastTrace 2 system's two-way audio capabilities. Audio warnings have been proven to stop between 80-90 per cent of incidents turning into more serious crimes.

The CMC has used ADPRO perimeter protection and remote monitoring products from Xtralis for over seven years and its customers from the manufacturing, retail, corporate, financial, utilities, local government and transport sectors have all benefited. The new FastTrace 2 can also be linked to a building's fire detection control panel to additionally provide video verification to operatives at the CMC of a possible fire, where they can also monitor and react to the situation as it happens. This is of particular benefit in unmanned buildings and those where lone workers may be present.

The new ADPRO iTrace app for iPhone also allows remote access to the FastTrace 2 live video feeds wherever 3G or Wi-Fi service is available.

Eric Roberts, Corps Security's CMC business development director, concluded, 'We have enjoyed a positive and productive relationship with Xtralis and their ADPRO remote monitoring products for many years and this will only be enhanced by the use of FastTrace 2. This pioneering technology will help prevent many incidents by providing an early warning of a breach in security, while the ability to provide an audio warning is a highly effective way of complementing the activities of a manned guarding service.'
